- Cookies.

You agree and acknowledge that the Website employs cookies. In general, a "cookie" is a small piece of text data stored on the viewer's computer by a website, to give the viewer's computer a unique identity while the website performs certain processes, such as filling an online member form, or calculating the number of unique visitors at a given time. Cookies may contain personal information, like email addresses, usernames, or passwords, or completely anonymous information, like a randomly generated number or string. They may be deleted once the viewer leaves a site, a section of a site, or closes the browser; or they may remain, so that the website remembers the viewer the next time the viewer visits that site. Most browsers allow the viewer to decline cookies automatically or to accept or decline each cookie individually. If you choose to decline cookies from the Website, however, you may not be able to use some sections of the Website or it may hinder the Website functions.
